KYMAT creates music with plants and makes this music visible in water-sound images during his performances. The sound waves are translated into water waves that form geometric shapes. The water acts as a three-dimensional sculpture that transforms sound into images. It's called cymatics, It's science. The sound structures can be found everywhere in nature. KYMAT gives botany a voice by connecting foliage with electrodes. These pick up the electromagnetic vibrations of the plants and transform them into audible midi signals.

KYMAT combines aspects of science and research with artistic imagery and sound worlds as well as therapeutic and meditative elements. The psychoactive sound relaxes the senses, invites you to meditate, and offers to let oneself go in the here and now – you enter the world of “hypnotation”. KYMAT artistic work consists of live music, water-sound-images, installations, and live shows.

KYMAT produces images that transcend their simple origins in his live performances. Water seems to dance along with the sound and creates impressive water images. By transforming sound into visual effects, KYMAT is a way of connecting science with sound art. In his show “Sonic Bloom”, KYMAT makes invisible worlds – such as the sound of plants – audible. Sound clouds emerge that carry the audience into meditative spheres.
